The Voice
for mixed chorus a cappella

A setting of the poem by Dunstan Ward

The Voice

A distant cry stopped me as I followed, in the island's afternoon heat, the goat track twisting between the thorn bushes and rocks around the cliffs above the glittering bay.

Below me, a lone fisherman was singing, a high, harsh song, careless yet impassioned, that he kept up even while he heaved the bow of his turquoise-painted boat against the swell.

I stood there listening, envious and chastened, as though this were the sound I had longed to hear through tide on tide of silence and self-doubt, the voice of one attuned to himself, to life.
